Our campaign this year showed perfectly the

'effectiveness' of the our liberal, red and reactionary opponents' ability to represent local views effectively or prevent our relentless base-building in our target areas. Even with the BPP throwing it's hat into the ring, they fail to mend their ways. With two elections looming, they will be forced to take their heads out of the sand to unleash a long-overdue, cack-handed, barrage of empty election spin.

In contrast, our own eye-on-the-ball alertness to Todmorden's problems and ability to quickly adapt our message makes our political presence is nothing to sneeze at. Now, until our own local elections come about we are content to firmly stand behind the BNP's campaign to win more district seats. Chris Jackson is an honest, old-fashioned patriot and I encourage you all to vote for him.

None of this, of course, guarantees the British People's Party political success but a good BNP result would keep our out of touch local politicians down. Despite the refusal of the Tod News to report the BPP's role in raising awareness of the Rose Street demolition amongst other things, we are a force to be reckoned with.

The BPP is no BNP clone but our rejection of the old, futile 'change things from the inside' line, as squawked by our Town Councillors, puts us on a similar political footing. We know the political terrain and prefer to 'agitate' people directly on a street level. Something the main parties don't relate to, they forgot how to do this a long time ago when they chose to rely on a biased media and the 'home field' support of an overgrown, corrupt local establishment. A relationship we aim to expose and transform into a 'home-field disadvantage'.

However if they have any pretensions about trying this now, well, they shouldn't bother, the radical 'community nationalism' (of which the BPP specializes) has long taken their place whilst they've been busy napping and hob-knobbing with their seedy friends in 'Tod Pride'. 2009 we have established ourselves, 2010 we will prepare ourselves and in 2011 our day in Todmorden will come.

MARKET BACKLASH AGAINST IAN COOPER'S PLANS!

"...about a year too late, but has Mr. Calderdale's luck finally run out?"

There is no such thing as a free lunch, and if Todmorden's Conservative Councillor, Ian Cooper thought he was getting an easy ride with his fat Council Cabinet salary, his status and his influence on the local round-table quango's, he is about to be brought down to earth real fast. Market Traders have finally woke up to his 'redevelopment' agenda that will result in the Town Centre being cleared out to make way for years of unnecessary, disruptive 'renovation'. This catastrophe in the offing was only allowed to develop due to the indecisive, vague and reactionary response from the market people, which contrasted starkly with the tough opposition by the BPP. Had these people not put this half-hearted faith in the rotten town politics, and instead put up a united front, against this peril, the threat to their livelihoods would not exist. Once the bulldozers come in and the metal barricades go up around Rose Street and, more importantly the adjacent car-park, it will be curtains for Todmorden, take that as a given...

The local business people, some of them staunch Tories, who initially supported him, and provided the necessary ten signatures for his political nomination (perhaps whilst wearing funny aprons, with rolled up trouser legs) now turning upon him. One inside market trader wrote into the local paper telling him to "do something useful with the money for a change", and another letter of opposition was also submitted, countersigned by a dozen or so shopkeepers. In the time honoured tradition, Liberal Democrat Hillary Myers and Labour's Steph Booth to crawl out from under their flat stones, full of false sympathy, to rescue the reputations of the main parties despite the fact that their own suggestions for the town square were just as predictable and stupid. The rest of the town councillors whose half-baked 'opposition' was absent at the time are in no position to talk either.

Now, Ian Cooper may think he's politically untouchable (it certainly shows in his manners), but the Conservatives will be fighting from behind in Calder Valley seat at the General election, with additional Calderdale Council seats up for grabs. Todmorden is highly important in both cases in Spring 2010, and if Cooper continues to rub people up the wrong way, he will be seen as a liability and dropped faster than a pork pie in a mosque. Accordingly the BPP views the upcoming Spring General Election as a final chance to deprive the Tories of their potential Calder Valley MP (Craig Whittaker) and their potential Ward Councillor (Julie Stansfield) before the bulldozers are called in during the summer. Then the BPP will go to town on his appeasers on the Town Council who failed to raise a finger of unequivocal opposition.

REMEMBERING HONEST JOHN

Unlike our expenses-scrourching MP's, John Fielden was a real hero. The Victorian MP round here, at a time when the establishment was fixated upon black slavery, this man stood up for the over-worked, exploited English, particularly the children.

Flying in the face of big business, (just as we nationalists do today as far as immigration and migrant-labour goes) he championed the 'ten hours act' which protected the young. What would he think of Great Britain now, one of the most lucrative pools of coolie labour!

Below is a sketch of the plaque we wish to lay on the seat opposite the town hall, near where Alex was stabbed. The spot, which is public property, is often covered with tables from a nearby cafe we see no reason we cannot lay our plaque there. We are forwarding the plans though his friends, so they cannot be dismissed as overtly political. The design is a simple one with no 'racial' connotation.

However, we believe he was stabbed for no other reason than his refusal to allow his friends to be shoved around by the growing number of racist Asian bullies blighting the Town. Had the racial roles of this incident been reversed, we would never hear the end of it. As it is, this despicable action has been swept neatly under the carpet. We just hope the scumbag responsible is not permitted to move back here after his pitifully short sentence, with a swagger as what presumably passes for a 'hero' in the Asian community. If this was an attempt to scare the white population of Todmorden into silence, then it failed miserably. The BPP is prepared to stand up, regardless of the danger, and band our people together so that a day comes when ethnic minorities are no longer in a position to intimidate us. If there were a few more Alex Holdroyd's and a few less Ian Cooper's and Louise Castro's around then as a group, white people could take charge of any given situation with a view to upholding the basic right to walk down the streets of Great Britain without being knifed by foreigners.
